Example #7

A referral is received alleging sexual contact to a nine-year old by an eleven-year old. Upon assessment it is found that the eleven-year old did initiate and impose the contact, therefore it was not mutual. However, even though there may have been elements of sexual gratification and humiliation, given the eleven-year old's maturity and development it was determined that the contact was not done with a maturely formed concept and understanding of the actions. Therefore, the eleven-year old should not be substantiated as a maltreater, but identified as a child who may need services. As the assessment found that contact occurred, sexual contact is substantiated.
